JEFFERSON DAVIS

TELLS THE CONFEDERATE STORY.

The Long-Expected Book Placed Before the Public —What Mr. Davis Says of Secession, the Causes Thereof, and the Pursuit of the War Between the States.

ATLANTA, June 4.—The New York Herald, of Friday, contains an elaborate review of Mr. Davis's book, "The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy," from advance sheets, which were the exclusive property of the Herald. From this review, and from other sources of information, I am enabled to give to THE CONSTITUTION, some interesting points of this remarkable book.

Let it be noted in the beginning that the book is all that is claimed for it in point of argument and detail—in the precision of its diction—and the fearless and uncompromising maintenance of the principles for which the south fought the war. If Mr. Davis is a trifle more aggressive than comports with statesmanlike discussion, it must be remembered that he writes from the standpoint of a leader pleading a defeated cause, and that he makes his final and only reply to the assaults that have been made on him by friend and foe for the past twenty years. He has never until the present, made one word of answer to the most crude charges that covered all the range of ill-doing from simple incompetence to personal crime. He has borne all this in uncomplaining silence, preferring to maintain the dignity of the cause for which such tremendous sacrifices had been made, rather than clear his name at the cost of that dignity. Little complaint should be made therefore, if in making his final and only appeal to the judgment of mankind on his course and the course of those who followed him, he should display some bitterness in treating those who had assailed him.

I need hardly say that the author is severe on General Joe Johnston. From this history it appears that not at one point after the first battle of Manassas did the president agree with General Johnston, or the general with the president. He blames Johnston with not pursuing the enemy after Manassas, quoting from personal observation to show how thorough was the panic of the enemy, and stating: "I dictated an order for immediate pursuit." He remarks further that Colonel Jordan, to whom he modified this order by ordering the pursuit to commence at dawn, said: "If you send the order as you first dictated it, the enemy won't stop until he gets into the Potomac river." In the Fredericksburg and the Vicksburg campaign, and blames Johnston for the loss of that point, because of his obstinacy in not moving forward with the best available force to Pemberton's aid, and because he found that officer to resume march in the presence of the enemy. He blames Johnston for sacrificing the strongest position in the confederacy—the mountain heights in north Georgia—and allowing the enemy to cut the confederacy in two. He finally blames him for surrendering his army to Sherman, saying that he did so in positive violation of his orders, and thus destroyed the confederacy, when had he acted differently his army could have marched beyond the Mississippi and continued the war. He is very decisive on this point, saying:

General Johnston communicated to me the substance of the observation mentioned received by him from General Sherman, and asked for instructions. I have neither his telegram nor my reply but can give it substantially from memory. It was that he should retire with his cavalry and as many infantry as could be mounted upon draught horses, and some light artillery, the rest of the infantry to be disbanded and a place of rendezvous appointed. If we could once get south of Augusta and the route, as that had been previously agreed on and supplies placed on it for his retreating army. The order was given to move in a south easterly direction with Sherman, to renew his attempt to reach an agreement for a termination of hostilities.

The end was soon reached, as I prefer bel in the following:

On the 26th, the day on which the armistice terminated, General Johnston again met General Sherman, and the terms of surrender, which had been made with General Lee, and he says, "General Johnston, without hesitation, agreed to make the same terms for the troops under the surrender of General Johnston's troops, with the condition of their being paralled and the officers to retain their sidearms, private horses and baggage."

It is true that these were the terms accepted by Lee, but the conditions of the two armies were different. Lee's supplies had been cut off, his men were exhausted by fatigue and hunger, he had no alternative except surrender. Still I resisted the steadily increasing pressure which was brought to bear to induce me to revoke his assignment, and only issued the order relieving him from command when I became satisfied that his declared purpose to occupy the works at Atlanta with a view to withdraw his army into the open country for freer operations would inevitably result in the loss of that last important point, and where the retreat would cease could not be foretold. If the army of Tennessee was found to be unable to hold position at any strength like those at Dalton, Resaca, Etowah, Kenesaw and on the Chattahoochee I could not reasonably hope that it would be more successful in the palms below Atlanta, where it would find neither natural nor artificial advantages of position.

Towards no other of the southern generals is Mr. Davis severe. He writes plainly what he thinks but makes little comment. As regards Gettysburg he adopts the theory—to my mind exploded fairly by General Longstreet—that Longstreet was ordered to attack at daylight on the morning of the 2d and that the battle was lost because of his delay. In many other places, however, he speaks in the highest terms of this officer. He puts upon Bazuregard the blame for two or three blunders, but in the main praises him. For Toombs he has not a word of censure, but it is plain that he had not a high regard for that gentleman's qualifications as secretary of state. He writes that it was his intention to make R. W. Barnwell, secretary of state, and to make Toombs, secretary of the treasury—having been struck with Mr. Toombs's financial ability in the senate debates. When South Carolina presented Memminger for the treasury, of course he could not take the premier from the same state. He, therefore, "selected Mr. Toombs to be secretary of state, a position for which others believed him to be well qualified." The use of the word "others" in the above is stoned for by another allusion to Mr. Toombs as a warrior, where he says, speaking of Antietam bridge, "That bridge was defended by General Toombs with two regiments of his brigade and the batteries of Gen. Jones. This small command repulsed five different assaults made by a greatly superior force." These are about the only allusions to General Toombs in the book. No attack is made on Mr. Stephens, who figures in the book simply and solely on the point of the peace commission, with which he was charged. There is but one allusion to Governor Brown, and his name is not mentioned then, but he is alluded to as "the governor of Georgia." It is on the occasion of Mr. Davis's visit to General Hood's headquarters after the fall of Atlanta. He says that the governor's avowed objection to the conscript law and to other measures made by a greatly superior enemy which had for four years been striving to subjugate the states would have led the United States authorities to do, as Mr. Lincoln had indicated—give any terms which might be found necessary speedily to terminate the existing war.

Had General Johnston obeyed the order sent to him from charlotte, and moved on the row selected by himself, with all his cavalry, so much of the infantry as could be mounted, and some light artillery, he could not have been successfully pursued by General Sherman. His force, united to that I had assembled at Augusta, would, it was believed, have been sufficient to vanquish any troops whom the enemy had between that point and Washington.

Had the cavalry with which I left Charlotte been associated with a force large enough to fight its way, it would probably have been able, undiscouraged by the surrender in their rear, to have joined me, and, when united with the forces of Maury, Forrest and Taylor, in Alabama and Mississippi, have constituted an army large enough to attract strength and revive the drooping spirits of the country. In the worst view of the case it should have been able to cross the trans Mississippi department, and there uniting with the armies of E. K. Smith and Magruder to form an army, which, in the portion of that country abounding in supplies and deficient in rivers and railroads could have confronted the unit only our enemy, foiled in their purpose and subjugation, and in accordance with the repeated declaration, have agreed on the basis of a return to the union, to acknowledge the sovereignty of the United States and by a convention or quasi treaty to guarantee security of person and property.

In reading the book and noting the continual disagreement between these leaders—the cross purposes at which they fought at each other—the conviction is forced that in this disagreement, made manifest at such vital points—is to be found one of the causes of the downfall of the confederacy. Of the Atlanta campaign, he says:

The following were among the considerations presented to General John ston, at my request, by Brigadier-General W. H. C. Whiting, chief of artillery of the army of northern Virginia, on April 16, 1865:

1. To take the enemy at disadvantage while weakened, it is believed, by sending troops to Virginia and having others still absent on furlough.

2. To break up his plans by anticipating and frustrating his combinations.

3. So to press him in his present position as to prevent his heavier massing in Virginia.

4. To defeat him in battle and gain great compensating strength in supplies, men and productive territory.

5. To prevent the waste of the army incident to inactivity.

6. To inspirit the troops and the country by success, and to discourage the enemy.

7. The necessity of falling back, which might probably occur if our antagonist be allowed to consummate his plans without molestation.

General Johnston cordially approved of an aggressive movement, and informed me of his purpose to make it as soon as reinforcements and supplies, then on the way, should reach him. As soon as reinforced he declared his purpose to advance to Dalton, there attack Sherman, if he has, as he expected to be, to strike at Cleveland, cut the railroad, control the river, and thus isolate East Tennessee, and, as a consequence, force our antagonist to give battle on this side of the Tennessee river To enable General Johnston to repair the battle and assume the offensive all effort was spared on the part of the government. Almost all the available military strength of the south and west in men and supplies was pressed forward and placed at his disposal. The troops, encouraged by the large accessions of strength which they were receiving and by which they knew were marching rapidly to their support, were eager to advance and confident in their power to achieve victory and recover the territory which they had lost. Their position was such as to warrant the confident expectation of successful resistance at least, Long mountain ranges, penetrated by few and difficult roads and paths, and deep and wide rivers, were to reach our old position one from which we could not be dislodged or turned, while that of the enemy, dependent for his supplies on a single line of railroad from Nashville to the point where he was operating, was manifestly perilous. The whole country stared the hope with the confederate government, that a decisive victory would soon be won in the mountains of Georgia, which would free the south and west from invasion, would open to our occupation and the support of our armies the productive territory of Tennessee and Kentucky, and so recruit our army in the west as to render it impracticable for the enemy to accumulate additional force in Virginia.

After detailing the short retreat of Johnston with his splendid army of nearly seventy thousand men from the strongest positions to be had, the author says, "All the resources of Maury, Forrest and Taylor, in Alabama and Mississippi, have constituted an army large enough to attract strength and revive the drooping spirits of the country. In the worst view of the case it should have been able to cross the trans Mississippi department, and there uniting with the armies of E. K. Smith and Magruder to form an army, which, in the portion of that country abounding in supplies and deficient in rivers and railroads could have confronted the unit

dress THE CONSTITUTION,
Atlanta, Ga.

Entered as second-class matter in the Atlanta postoffice, December 31, 1879.

ATLANTA, GA., JUNE 5, 1881.

THOSE who would have us believe that the DeLesseps canal company is a delusion, will find it difficult to account for the fact that it has just bought the Panama railroad at a good round price, and will also be paid to the stockholders of the Southwestern road, and the stockholders of the West Point road are assured of an annual dividend of fourteen per cent. All this goes to show that the prosperity of the railway lines is considerably ahead of the average prosperity with which they have been credited.

This is particularly true of the Wadley system, which has been managed with wonderful skill and economy. So far from fearing competition, that system is now in a condition to invite it. We started out, however, to say that the great combinations, while they may be the result of competition on a small scale, are really made with a view to competition on a larger scale, and this will be the result. So far as Georgia is concerned, they will be under healthy and genial restrictions that bring them nearer to the people, and, in view of the increased facilities as well as the increase of business, such restrictions as are imposed will not be felt by the roads.

On the other hand, it is impossible for any thoughtful person to believe that the period of railroad development in Georgia upon which we are about to enter will have the effect of crippling railways already in existence. Senator Brown, whose views in this, as in other matters, are entitled to great weight, says that the building of a new road from Atlanta to Rome will not have the effect of crippling the Western and Atlantic railway. Why? Simply because the productive energy of the country will give two roads as much as they can do. There will be no local competition between them for the reason that the local business of the new road will be new.

The same may be said of Mr. Cole's proposed new road from Atlanta to Macon. It will not have the effect of injuring the Central road, for the reason that there will be business enough for the two roads. There will be competition between the Cole and Wadley combinations for western business, but it will be competition of a wholesome sort, and every section of the state will enjoy the benefits of it. Altogether the situation is both interesting and promising.

Lawlessness in the Mountains.

We are informed that an attempt was recently made to assassinate John A. Stuart, in Fannin county, by men concealed in the woods near the road. Stuart was going to court to prosecute parties accused of burning his property last spring. There had been altogether too much of such lawlessness in our mountain counties, and we had hoped that matters were improving in these counties, but it seems that they are not. Stuart's offense to the people among whom he lives consists in the fact that he is a collector of internal revenue. The illicit distillers have complained that people with whom they are not acquainted, are sent to collect the tax on liquor; and yet when one of their own people is appointed, they burn him out and shoot at him from ambush. This is all wrong, and the sooner it is stopped the better it will be for all parties concerned. It is useless to carry on a guerilla fight against the revenue law. We know that the good people in the mountain counties are utterly opposed to all this lawlessness, and will do all they can to support the officers of the law; and when men attempt to take the law in their own hands, they embarrass the law-abiding citizens, and injure every such citizen in their county.

The chief trouble is found in the fact that demagogues who want office have deceived the people. No doubt many of the requirements of the revenue law are very harsh; but we do not propose to get the people into deeper trouble in order to gain popularity for the time being. Mr. Andrew Clark, the collector, has arrayed every politician in this part of the state against him because he has enforced the law; and if he had been properly supported by those who ought to have co-operated with him, the state of affairs in the upper counties would have been very different. We do not like Mr. Clark's politics, but he has made a good officer and his personal integrity is unquestioned by those who know him. THE CONSTITUTION has opposed him whenever he exceeded his authority, and will do so again; but the fight now waged against him springs from his determination to enforce the law, and those who oppose him in the mountains do so because it renders them popular with the illicit distillers and their friends. We want the law respected. If the law is improper or unjust let it be repealed. Any other course involves just such conduct as the recent attempt to assassinate Stuart, and leads on from bad to worse until no man's life is safe. The good of the mountain counties and the fair fame of the state demand that such lawlessness shall be ended, and the law respected.

A correspondent, who says he has read the railroad articles of THE CONSTITUTION with interest, wishes to [illegible] if the recent combination of [illegible] ly to the people, [illegible] combination inevitably begets others, and compels the completion of missing links in new systems.

Let us take, for instance, the recent combination made by Mr. Wadley, the railroad Napoleon of Georgia. Whatever its purpose may have been its effect will not be to destroy competition. This must be obvious to any one who will carefully study Mr. Wadley's new system. It is a combination made with direct reference to competition on a larger scale than has heretofore been attempted. It is a combination made with full knowledge of the fact that other combinations were upon the point of consummation, and, so far as the public is concerned the result will be cheap freights and increased facilities.

Even the footings of the census show that the era of prosperity upon which the country has entered is not speculative, but substantial. All the forces of every branch and department of production are at work, and for the first time in many years the industrial energies of all sections of the country are contributing to the progress and development of the country. It is natural that the result of this energetic development should make itself felt in the increased prosperity of the railroads. THE CONSTITUTION alluded recently to the prosperity of the railways in Georgia as extraordinary. All the roads are prosperous, but the prosperity of those which have been wisely and skillfully managed can an eye to the future is unexampled. Our news columns yesterday contained the details of a recent meeting of the directors of the Central railroad in Savannah, which are suggestive not only of the prosperity of that great corporation, but of the remarkable foresight and sagacity of its management.

For many years, Mr. Wadley has been improving his lines, extending his system and perfecting his plans until now he is enabled to discount the future by paying to his stockholders a certificate of indebtedness amounting to forty dollars a share, in addition to the regular dividend. THE COTTON MARKET

CONSTITUTION OFFICE, Atlanta, June 4 1881.

New York—Futures opened steady at lower prices, and, notwithstanding the more accurate upward movement of quotations during the day the months were barely able to recover yesterday's closing figures. The market remained remarkably steady throughout the day, and especially was this the case with the fall and winter months which stood without quotable change up to the close. The market was not altogether destitute of a dull feeling to-day and the present indication points to lower prices for the early future. At the close futures ruled quiet but steady. Spots opened quiet and closed quiet and steady without change in quotations; middling 11 1-16c.

Net receipts to-day amount to 5,840 bales, against 2,540 bales last year; exports 8,291 bales; last year 4,807 bales; stock 467,564 bales; last year 383,409 bales.

Below we give the opening and closing quotations of cotton futures in New York to-day:

PATENT MEDICINES.

MEDICATED STEAM
Vermin Destroyer
AND DISINFECTANT,
A NEW AND WONDERFUL INVENTION.
AN EFFECTIVE, CERTAIN AND SIMPLE MEANS OF Destroying Bed Bugs, Cockroaches, Ants, Moths and Parasites of all kinds.

The apparatus for generating the steam is an ordinary nursery lamp, holding half a pint of the Medicated Fluid with a tube at the top to direct the Medicated Steam upon any point infested with insects. It is heated with a small spirit lamp beneath the boiler. For Dwellings, Hotels, Steamships, Restaurants, etc., nothing ever discovered equals this appliance. It is harmless to human life; is inexpensive and simple in its use. While a most potent means for destroying vermin, it is the best disinfectant known and may be most effectually used to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, such as Yellow Fever, Scarlet Fever, Typhoid Fever, Diptheria, Small Pox, &c. One trial is the best proof of the great advantages of this over all other appliances. For sale by Druggists and General Dealers.

BILL ARP
Makes His Weekly Visit to Our Readers.

Written for The Constitution.

The country is safe at last, whether the town is or not. Dewberries are ripe and huckleberries too, and blackberries are turning red. Mulberries and cherries and oldfield plums are scattered around. May apples are fit for pies, and spring chickens for the gridiron. We've enough in sight to carry us to roastin-ear time, and what with snap-beans and potatoes it's a hopeful prospect of getting through the summer. The wheat, too, is about ready for the reaper, and will give us biscuit and pie-crust, and batter cakes, and the churn goes cheerily every day, and the buttermilk keeps cold and sweet in the spring house. If we only had a barrel of sugar for sweetnin' I think the family would be content and thankful, and rejoice in the glories of farming life. Young folks are a little particular about such things, but we old ones look back to the time when we had to do without all the luxuries of life, and lived in a stasin to get the children bread. We remember when this beautiful country was as barren and desolate as a wilderness—not a cow, or a hog, or a chicken left. The fields grown up in briars and broom sage, ditches gaping open on every hill side, and lonesome chimneys and withered shade trees mourning over the ruins of every homestead. That was war. But now we are preserving the arts of peace. The sword has been turned into the plowshare, which, I reckon, makes about the greatest contrast, or scriptures wouldent have put it that way. Farming is the most peaceful pursuit in the world, and the most useful and honorable, but anything is better than war. Talk about your heroes and the shock of contending armies, and the martial music of the drum, and the boom of cannon, and all that, but there's another side to the picture, and a painting on it, and any old one-eyed, one legged, one-armed soldier, can give it to you. Says Howell, says he to me, "the dark side of the war will never be written—nobody's too proud." What I went through myself would fill a book. They sent us away up into the Hart's mountains or the Appennines, (I think he said) away up in western Virginia, and we froze up and starved half, and the snow and the rivers froze over, and when orders come to countermarch we couldent march at all, and the country was a wilderness, and there was nothing in it to eat, and nobody lived there, and the commissary was always absent without leave, and after perishing for three days and living on roots we split up and agreed to take our chances for the white settlements, and me and five men struck out together. I knew that if we followed the river it would bring us out sooner or later, and so for forty-eight hours we never stopped, and we never eat anything, for there was nothing to eat and we never got sight of a turkey or a deer or a wild cat or a squirrel or a bird, and we had no fish hooks and no bait and the boys began to lag behind and talk low and complain of me for bringing em that way, and at last we held a council and one feller said there was no use in all of us perishing, and he looked so wild and crazy and desperate and I saw they were combined against me, for I was plump and round and in good condition and they were all lank and lean, and I was the only one who would make a good barbecue, and so I walked off down the river to ruminate, and as good luck would have it I saw something black away down on a little island, and I saw it move, and when I slipped up closer to it I saw it was an old cow, and I got feller, and I crawled on the ground like an Indian, shoving my gun before me until I got in shooting distance, and I took aim with all the deliberation of a man who was shooting for his life, and I killed him. He never spoke, and I felt so happy and so grateful I couldent help shouting glory, and I shouted it over and over and the boys come down and we all tried together and we skinned the varment and got a right smart chance of it we saved, and had enough left for another meal. In another day we got out, for the river (the Danube, I think he said) brought us out on the wilderness, as I knew it would, but about half of the command perished and we were never heard from. Now thats what I call war, and I don't want any more of it in mine, and I'm not going to set up another for my children." Jes'so—well, it is enough to think how keen our boys were to fight, but when you come to wassel counting on more than one or two fights, and we was to whip em most grogious and walk right into the kingdom, and that was to be the end of it. I remember Dick Swain (old man from Roswell) who was about three score years and ten, and there was five in his eye, and sat in his wizard, and he shouldered a musket and joined a company and fought all over Mexico, and Dick Rain and he killed over 'leven yankees, and after the fight was over he came up to Dr. Miller puffing and blowing and covered all over with dust and glory, and says he, "Doctor, my face is run; I don't perceive nuffin to help it, but I put enough. Please give me a discharge and let me go home." And the doctor gave it to him. His "regt" soon broke and spread one another. When this generation has passed away and another set of fools come up to take the road, maybe they will want a little brush fun, but I reckon, by that time I'm going to tell my children and my children's children to let it alone severely—wont you?

THE GATE CITY RAILROAD.

The Movement for a New Horse Car Line in this City.

Since the petition of the president and board of directors of the Gate City street railroad company to the city council for the grading of Jackson street was referred to the finance committee, street committee and city attorney, Mr. Clayton, city engineer, has been busily engaged ascertaining the cost that will accrue to the city in complying with the request. So far Mr. Clayton thinks the work can't be done for less than $1,000.

The Atlanta Street Railway Company

The Atlanta street railway is now building four new cars. The cars are large and handsome in their design and construction and are a combination of the two styles now in use in this city. The sides are open like the cars used on the Ponce de Leon line but the seats extend across the car with a door on each side, making room enough for two passengers on each seat.

In addition to these four cars the Macon purchases are being refurbished and repainted, and when finished will give the company thirty cars.

There are one hundred horses and mules in the stables. The stock is used one hour and rested three, and are well rubbed and fed during each rest.

The Atlanta street cars make about six hundred and forty miles each day.

The Peters Street line is the longest and runs only two cars.

The Decatur and Marietta lines are picking up an even mile of the factories and workshops along the lines.

One run to the fair grounds every day, leaving on the hour and half hour.

Ralph Peters's Promotion.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of a recent date says:

"From an official source we learn Superintendent Waite, of the Little Miami division of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad, (whose resignation has been accepted) has been appointed to the president of the New York, Lake Erie and Western railroad was noted recently in the papers will be succeeded by Mr. R. Peters, the present superintendent of that portion of the third division of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad from Logansport to the State Line, and from Logansport to Chicago. Mr. Peters will take charge on the 1st proximo. He is stated to be one of the best men in the employ of the Pan-handle, and has worked up from the bottom."

The young man who has thus been called to fill such an important station in the railroad world is well known here and is claimed as an Atlanta boy. He is a graduate of the state university, and was trained for five years under S. M. Felton, Jr., who has gained such celebrity for his management of the Pittsburg and Cincinnati division of the Pennsylvania Central. He also enjoyed the tuition of the general manager, D. W. Caldwell, who stands at the head of his profession. Mr Peters has used his years well since he left Atlanta, and they have brought him early a rich reward which may ripen into a life of remarkable success.

What Ails You?

Is it a disordered liver giving you a yellow skin or costive bowels; which have resulted in distressing piles or do your kidneys refuse to perform their functions? If so, your system will soon be clogged with poisons. Take a few doses of Kidney Wort and you'll feel like a new man—nature will throw off every impediment, and each organ will be ready for duty. Druggists sell both the dry and liquid.—Evansville Tribune.

The Southern Car Works.

KNOXVILLE, June 3—The Southern car works company was to-day duly organized under a charter from Tennessee with a capital stock of $100,000. The works will be in operation in 60 days and will employ 200 mechanics. The company already has orders for a year's work.

John Keely again comes to the front as will be seen by a glance at our advertising columns to-day.

Our irrepressible friend Keely makes anything and everything serve as a good argument for supplying the public with dry goods at prices unapproachable by other merchants. A fortnight since we find him plainly stating that the no spring of this year rendered it imperative that a considerable amount of his stock should be converted into cash; that has been accomplished and now we find him attending gigantic auction sales in New York and telegraphing of successful operating there. Success attend his pluck and enterprise say we.

The simple answer is, A medicine prepared from the roots of a number of forest plants—a combination which has long been known to cure a certain specific disease. To say that it is a Blood Purger, and excels any remedy known to the materia medica does not at all indicate its true character or power, or express its diamond value. These cardinal points are winning for our house golden encomiums and a large trade from all parts of the country. From our customers we have frequent voluntary testimonials as to the great superiority of our stock in all the above particulars. As a sample read the following from the New nan Herald of June 24:

"See the advertisement of A. O. M. Gay & Co., in this week's issue They keep a fine stock of Clothing, and we can testify from personal knowledge that it is well cut and made. The superior fitness of their goods is readily seen by trying on, as we have done, the loose, uncouth garments for sale by other houses in Atlanta. Test them all, and you will wind up at Gay's, unless you are looking for cheap, shoddy goods."

The News from New York.

NEW YORK, June 2, 1881.—Mr. David H. Dougherty, Atlanta, Ga.—Dear Sir: After receiving yours of the 25th instant, advising me to attend the large auction sale of Townsend & Fargis on June 1st, I took several days to look around at the general market in order to post myself on prices by the day of sale. I have attended the sale—goods sold high and I could not fill your orders satisfactorily, but I have filled them all in other houses among agents and commission men, at lower prices. Agents are very anxious to get their stocks reduced at this time of the season, and are selling goods at bottom figures. Please report your opinion, after opening up and examining the goods. I will keep you advised of the market. Yours respectfully C P DEXTER.
